The author of Hist	orical and Descri	otive Sketches of	Norfolk described the handsomest,

Baptist Church, dedicated the new church on May 30, 1850. They called the accomplished author and preacher, Tiberius Gracchus Jones, to be their first pastor.

The church was designed by the noted architect, Thomas U. Walter, in "Perpendicular Gothic" and its handling of that style is representative of the Early Victorian period whose various styles and revivals depended chiefly on applied decoration rather than on structural form. The original design and decoration were adhered to during the renovations of 1941 and 1970. The Rev. Sparks D. Melton, pastor from 1908 to 1952, is memorialized in the education wing added to the church in 1958. The Melton Hall wing is one of two material alterations to the original structure.

The original steeple was blown down during a severe storm in the summer of 1879. The replacement was less lofty.. The church measures 65' by 105' and was the tallest building in Norfolk from 1850-1879. Original furnishings included the organ by George Jardine of New York.

Freemason Street Baptist owes its importance as much to its survival on the fast-changing plain of this port city as to its being a most uplifting piece of urban decoration.
